

I live in a small community in northwest Montana. We have local radio stations that I listen to, but I also listen to KLOVE. It is a positive,encouraging format that uplifts me as I listen. Our local Christian is a commercial station and while it is quite good I like having the option of another station.

It would be a disservie to this community and many others around the country to not allow KLOVE and other stations like it to use translators to broadcast beyond their regional area.

I would encourage the FCC to settle this matter in a way that does not force national and regional stations to discontinue the use of FM translator stations.

Susan Williams